of and blood that evidently came from the rider, was found on its side.

The officers then went back and placed the four men at the haystack under arrest, then went to Arviso's house as quickly as possible. Mrs. Arviso says the Mexican demanded the weapon and ammunition, told her he was wounded and waddling and mounting one of Arviso's horses, rode off into the mountain fastness before the officers could get sight of him again.

In looking around the premises the officers then discovered Carl Clark's horse which had been stolen two months ago and took possession of it, under the protest of Arviso who will have to explain how he came to have it. One of the Mexicans in the party is Arviso's partner and an inquiry satisfied the officers that he had nothing to do with the case so he was liberated.

Adams and Mickey then arranged to bring the three Mexicans to Phoenix. Luterger remained in that vicinity and Harper started back overland with his own horse, the mounts of Adams and Mickey and the two stolen horses that had been recovered.

IMPORTANT CHANGES IN ST. LUKE'S HOME

New Policy Adopted and Bacteriological Laboratory Established.

What is claimed to be the first bacteriological and pathological laboratory in Arizona has been established at St. Luke's Episcopal Home at a cost of $1500. It is in charge of Dr. Wm. Warner Watkins, who is preparing to abandon his general practice as a physician in order to properly attend to the demands upon it. The experiment made this year of keeping the home open all summer, has proved so successful and this is manifestly such an excellent place in which to spend the summer that arrangements are being made now to reorganize the work of the home with a view to continuing its conduct in the future. Dr. Julius W. Atwood, bishop of Arizona, is spending a few weeks now in the northern part of Arizona at places along the Santa Fe trail, expecting to reach Phoenix about Sept. 26, and Rev. Mr. Seabright, the new vice rector of Trinity pro-cathedral, will assume the duties of his position October 1.

Taft's Keen Logic CUTS SOPHISTRY

fair to the court. It is true that the court, in the early days of the construction of the statute, had said that it could not limit the statute in effect by excluding from its operation what was deemed reasonable at common law. But as other cases arose it found it necessary to make exceptions to the literal operation of the words "restraint of trade" and it did so by excepting what was minor, or incidental or indirect, and including only those cases where the chief object of the contract or combination was the restraint. In doing so, the court said that it must give the statute a reasonable construction and not one leading to absurd or ridiculous results.

"Did the court not condemn the Standard Oil company, the father of all trusts, in the history of which every form of criminal illegality was practiced? Did it not, on the other hand, condemn the tobacco trust, of much later origin and framed under the advice of cunning counsel for the very purpose of evading the condemnation of the statute and at the same time securing and enjoying the monopoly the framers of the statute intended to prevent and punish?"

"Let me renew again the invitation to any of the vociferous critics of the decision of the supreme court to use their legal imaginations and state the facts of a case not named within the rule of construction put upon the statute by the supreme court, but included within their construction of it, which reasonable men would think it wise or proper to make criminal."

"Now I desire to call attention to a very broad distinction that many persons have failed to draw or perceive between a reasonable construction of the statute which the supreme court has insisted upon and the introduction of the word 'reasonable' in the statute so as to lead to a result by which combinations for the purpose of restraining trade with a view to controlling prices and maintaining a monopoly could be held to be reasonable and thus lawful. Until the decision of the supreme court in these last two cases, there was a clearly defined hope in the minds of many business men that in some way or other the statute could be construed as to make it apply only to unreasonable monopolies and unreasonable exclusion of competition and control of prices. They had in their minds the thought that in some way or other a standard could be set by which if those who enjoyed the monopoly and the restraint of competition and the control of prices did not abuse their power to the point of securing from the public exorbitant profits, their arrangements could be held to be only reasonable and not within the statute or punishable by law. In my message of January seventh, 1910, on the interstate commerce and anti-trust laws and federal incorporation, I used this language:

"Many people conducting great businesses have cherished a hope and belief that in some way or other a line may be drawn between 'good trusts' and 'bad trusts' and that it is possible by amendment to the anti-trust law to make a distinction under which good combinations may be permitted to organize, suppress competition, control prices and do it all legally if only they do not abuse the power by taking too great profit out of the business. They point with force to certain notorious trusts as having grown into power through criminal methods by the use of illegal rebates and plain cheating, and by various acts utterly violative of business honesty or morality, and urge the establishment of some legal line of separation by which 'criminal trusts' of this kind can be punished, and they, on the other hand, are permitted under the law to carry on their business. Now, the public, and especially the business public, ought to rid themselves of the idea that such a distinction is practicable or can be introduced into the statute. Certainly under the present anti-trust law no such distinction exists. It has been proposed, however, that the word 'reasonable' should be made a part of the statute, and then that it should be left to the court to say what is a reasonable restraint of trade, what is a reasonable suppression of competition, what is a reasonable monopoly. I venture to think that this is to put into the hands of the court a power impossible to exercise on any consistent principle which will insure the uniformity of decision essential to just judgment. It is to thrust upon the court the duty of making precedents to enable them to carry, and to give them a power approaching the arbitrary abuse of which might involve our whole judicial system in disaster."

"This paragraph has been quoted and spread on the record of the senate on the motion of a senator who considered this to be at variance with the decision of the supreme court. Instead of being at variance, it is in exact accord with those decisions. Again from those who have given force free competition as an economic force that ought to be encouraged or enforced, and who are utterly opposed to the spirit of the anti-trust law, we have frequently heard the question, 'Well, suppose you convict those large combinations under the statute, what are you going to do about it? You can, perhaps, send some men to the penitentiary for creating these combinations which have cheapened the cost of production and given you most of your foreign trade and much of your prosperity, but what are you going to do with the capital invested, the plant and the organization? You can confiscate it and ruin your country by a panic, but you can't divide such combinations into their component parts again, for the lines of division have disappeared into a common ownership."

The court has met the issue presented by the doubters and the scoffers. It has vindicated the majesty of the law, has illustrated the wonder-derful elasticity and adaptability of remedy by injunction in equity, and has at the same time manifested a due regard for the welfare of the innocent business men and the community at large, who in a cataclysm caused by the confiscation of such enormous capital as are involved in these combinations and a suspension of the legitimate part of their business would be buried with them in a common ruin.

The court has exhibited a courage, in facing the necessary results in enforcing the statute that, instead of promoting an attack on it, ought to make every American proud that we have such a tribunal. It is now enforcing its decree against the Standard Oil company and against the tobacco company and it is making these great corporations divide themselves into actually competing parts under such provisions in the decree as prevent an attack on it, ought to make every American proud that we have such a tribunal.
